St. Augustine

Feast Day – August 28th

St. Monica, Mother of St. Augustine

332-387 AD

Feast Day August 27th

Augustine, about his mother:

Among people who were quarreling or at discord she showed herself, when-ever she could, very much of a peacemaker. She might hear very many bitter things said on both sides. This kind of outpouring of swelling and undigested malice very likely takes place when a person talks to a friend who is present about an enemy who is absent. On these occasions hatred is expressed in its very real crudity and in the bitterest terms possible. But my mother would never report to one person what another had said to her, unless what had been said might help to bring the two together again.

Ordinary humanity ought to make us feel that we have not done enough if we merely refrain from increasing and exacerbating ill feeling among people by our evil tongues. We ought to go further and try to use our tongues well so as to put an end to ill feeling. This was what my mother was like, and you, Lord, were the master who, deep in the school of her heart, taught her this lesson.

Jesus said: "Blessed are the peacemakers, they shall be called children of God." Matthew 5:9
